AACI Names Medlive Exclusive Digital Education Partner

Agreement expands Medlive's network of sustained partnerships with leading oncology institutions

The Association of American Cancer Institutes \(AACI\) has named Medlive its exclusive digital education partner, making Medlive the sole digital education platform for all AACI online programming.

"This partnership reflects AACI's confidence in Medlive's ability to help us deliver on our mission: to accelerate progress against cancer. Their team has demonstrated a genuine commitment to education, and the Medlive platform has the flexibility to meet clinicians and cancer center leaders where they are. We look forward to expanding what we can accomplish together," said AACI Executive Director Jennifer W. Pegher.

Cancer care advances fastest when emerging science from academic institutions reaches clinicians who need it most. AACI exists to accelerate that process, representing more than 100 leading academic and freestanding cancer centers across North America, setting the pace for how cancer is diagnosed, treated, and managed.

Medlive amplifies the reach of that work by distributing video-first education through exclusive alliances with organizations that lead in their respective therapeutic fields. Learner data from Medlive's engaged clinician network informs how AACI programs are structured, which topics are prioritized, and how future webinars are designed.

"At Medlive, we believe the most powerful health care education is developed with organizations that have spent decades earning trust in their field. Our collaboration with AACI reflects this truth: change happens when credible education integrates emerging science with the patient voice. We are honored that AACI will exclusively leverage Medlive to educate their members who look to them for practice-shaping updates that improve outcomes for all," said Robert Rosenbloom, chief executive officer, Medlive.
